

We Made It Rain!

Walt walks the dry, grey plain all day. He sings his songs to find his way.

'Send rain!' he calls out to the sky. But no clouds come, and the land stays dry.

He points up high
and starts to say,
'Send clouds and rain
down here this way!
Come, sweet rain,
come down to stay!
Drip, drop, and splash
with me and play!'

A big thump-thump
comes down the
way. Walt spins to look. What a great day! A Dino waves
his long, huge tail.
He grins and
thumps right down
the trail!

Dino loves the song Walt sings! They play and sing. What joy it brings!

'Give me the clouds!
Give me the rain!
Pour it all down on
this dry plain!'

The clouds rush in,
so dark and grey.

At last! The rain
has come to stay!

A bolt of light splits
the dry plain! Walt
and Dino praise the rain!

Drops pour down
on this grey day!
Walt grips his hat
and starts to sway.
Dino grins and yells
his praise. 'Thank you, clouds, for rainy days!'

We Made It Rain!

Walt sings to the sky every day, begging the clouds for rain on the dry, grey plain. But what happens when a giant, grinning dinosaur thumps down the trail and wants to join in? Can two loud voices and one silly song really call the clouds down to play? This decodable reader practises the ai/ay phonogram in words like 'rain,' 'day,' 'plain,' 'trail,' and 'sway.'
