

FILL IT UP!

ILLUSTRATED BY NOMPUMELELO MDLULI

She wants a drink.

There has not been rain in a while.

Is there any water in the pail?

There is just a drop.

A cartoon illustration of a dry landscape. In the foreground, a green, anthropomorphic pump with a sad face and a long, thin spout stands on a yellow, sandy ground. A red bucket is placed next to the pump's spout, and a small amount of water is being poured into it. To the left, a person with dark skin and curly hair is partially visible, holding a long handle that extends to the pump. The background is a light blue sky with a bright yellow sun, a few small birds, and a white cloud. The overall scene suggests a drought or a dry season.

She goes to the pump.

The pump is fed from a well. It is dry.

She goes to the tank
and turns the tap.

No luck.

She tries the river.

The trees drank it all.

It is so dry.

She walks to the dam.

That is dry as well.

Where will she get a drink?

She lives by the sea, but that water has too much salt for her to drink it.

There is one, dark cloud in the dry. She is mad. She yells at it for not raining.

More clouds come.
It storms.

She goes home
and hides from the big bangs.

When the sun comes out
the next day, she sees that there is a lot to drink!
