

Got To Go

illustrated by Jackson

An illustration of a large, brown tree trunk on the left side of the frame. A small, white bird with a blue face and a tuft of white feathers on its head is perched on a branch. Several other similar birds are flying in the air around the tree. In the bottom left corner, a pair of green-gloved hands is holding a long, thin purple pole with a net at the end. The net is open and facing towards the birds. The background is a light, pale yellow color with some small green leaves scattered around.

What is this?

Men want to get the birds with nets.

Tim does not heed what his pals tell him. He wants to play.

Why, Tim?

It is time to fly.
It is not time to look at a bug.

WUWUUSH

Tim has found a spot with a lot of bugs!

Where is he?

Oh no, Tim is lost!

His pals are gone.

What will he do?

Tim lands by a stream.

He has a big drink.

Aaaam!

Tim finds a worm to have as a snack. It will help him fly for a long time.

He sets off.

He sees cool bugs
and wants to stop,
but he does not.

Tim is doing his best not to look at things. But what is that?

The sky is full of fire bugs!

But oh no!

Where did
that light come from?

The men with nets are back!

Can Tim make it back up into the sky?

Tim gets up in the air. He gets too
high for the nets
to catch him.

Tim has his eyes
shut so that he will not stop. But what did he miss?

His flock!

Tim will make sure
that he does not get lost next time.
